Vacant, contaminated land is a common site in urban centers and rural areas throughout Indiana and the Midwest. Its presence is an eyesore to local neighborhoods and undermines the local tax base. However, many communities have successfully turned former brownfields into thriving developments.

The Nuts and Bolts of Brownfield Redevelopment is a comprehensive, week-long training session that takes participants through brownfield redevelopment, from start to finish. Using actual case studies, participants will learn how many communities have overcome obstacles and stimulated successful redevelopment by characterizing and assembling parcels, cleaning them up, and using public funds to attract private redevelopment. This Nuts & Bolts training has been modified to meet the needs of small communities with brownfield issues.
